Range masters and firearms instructors today must be proficient in a broad spectrum of subjects some of which are training, administration, and liability. They must have a comprehensive understanding of the responsibility they undertake when accepting this position. Programs that they design and implement train their officers to survive deadly threat encounters and could ultimately result in the taking another person's life. In order to understand such great liability, range masters and firearms instructors must constantly prepare and accurately document for the possibility of judicial review. In addition to standard state qualification courses, firearms training must incorporate beneficial exercises and employ current adult learning strategies. Training teams must present in a consistent and purposeful manner and courses must be based on realistic events. Being a firearms instructor who teaches only from stale and outdated material is not enough today. Today's Complete Range Master must oversee and guide the instructors under them so to ensure they are properly presenting quality and useful material.

This three-day course is the journey to become the Complete Range Master. With an emphasis on developing immediately useable skills, the course incorporates lesson plan development through live-fire student-designed and graded practical exercises. It is designed for both novice and veteran firearms instructors who wish to enter a more advanced phase of their careers and duties.

This class will be conducted three days during the week of May 3-8, 2020. Exact days TBA.

The IALEFI Master Instructor Development Program (MIDP) was designed to provide continuing education to individuals certified as firearms instructors.

Day one is an eight hour course focused on the duty handgun. Students will review pistol fundamentals with focus on communication skills and transferring their knowledge to others. Students are encouraged to bring questions and concerns to class about training challenges they have encountered. This is an interactive class – students should be prepared to analyze their instruction styles and attend with open minds to enhancing their respective skill sets.

Day two focuses on the combination of handgun and patrol rifle skills. This class will push students out of their “comfort zones” and encourage them to think about their approach to shooting in a different way. Instructors must always be able to operate “outside the box,” reframing their views and explanations to best provide students with the benefit of their experience. Experienced international instructor Paolo Grandis emphasizes a holistic approach to instruction with concentration on harmonizing the psychological and physiological aspects of shooting.

The final day of the course will be a detailed look at the duty shotgun weapon system and current trends in ammunition development for the shotgun. It will provide ideas for improving shooter operation of the weapon system. It will look at the continuing role the shotgun plays in the close quarter confrontations. At the end of the course students will receive a diagram for setting up the course of fire using steel reactionary targets

The IALEFI Master Instructor Development Program (MIDP) was designed to provide continuing education to individuals certified as firearms instructors. Foundation courses of the MIDP include instructor level training on the three most commonly utilized law enforcement weapon systems - handgun, rifle and shotgun.

Different proven methodologies will be used to enhance the teaching skills of the police firearms instructor. Hands-on skills will progress from the basics to the more complex and all participants regardless of skill level will find themselves challenged. Practical exercise will put an emphasis on both practical marksmanship and operational skills.
